

Lauingen on the Danube – The Hometown of Albert the Great

The town of Lauingen (Donau), with a population of about 11,000 has many interesting sights in store:

Next to the White Horse Tower, the town's most prominent landmark, the lively market place spreads out, at its centre the statue of Albertus Magnus (died in 1280), the town's greatest son.

In the background towers the magnificent town hall built in the classicistic fashion. Amongst the time-honoured churches in the old part of the town, the late gothic parish church of St. Martin is particularly note worthy; the Middle Ages seem to have come to life again in the picturesque sights the Valley of the Fountains presents to the visitor. The impressive architecture of the former Ducal-Bavarian palace is suggestive of the town's importance at the end of the medieval period.

In a part of the town called Faimingen, the most notable Roman temple for "Apollo Grannus" has been partially reconstructed on the original foundations, thus giving an impression of the site's aspect in Roman times, when it was the biggest roman temple north of the Alps.
